THE PICARROON

Winter is a month where across the globe the temperature drops and the weather becomes a little more miserable. For the desperate Pirates on the bottom tip of Africa things were no different in the long months. Howling winds and tempest seas forced any rich merchant ships into winter anchorage and left many an idle Pirate whiling away the time until more favourable sailing conditions brought the fat bounty to within their reaches again.

In order to maintain the spirit and fitness of their rowdy group of idle buccaneers Pirate Kings were forced to arrange activities. Whether it was a run up a mountain, a swim out to catch a penguin or just wheeling the barrow over rough lands. 400 Years later nothing has changed
